Notice of Maintenance Fees Payable

Title 37, Code of Federal Regulations, Section 1.362(d), effective Nov. 1, 1984, provides that maintenance fees may be paid without surcharge for a six-month period beginning 3, 7, and 11 years after the date of issue of patents based on applications filed on or after Dec. 12, 1980. An additional six-month grace period is provided by 35 U.S.C. 41(b) and 37 CFR 1.362(e) for payment of the maintenance fee with the surcharge set forth in 37 CFR 1.20(k) or (l), as amended effective Oct. 5, 1985. If the maintenance fee is not paid in a patent requiring such payment the patent will expire on the 4th, 8th or 12th anniversary of the grant.

Attention is drawn to the patents which were issued on September 25, 1984, for which maintenance fees due at 3 years and six months may now be paid. The patents have patent numbers within the following ranges:

Utility Patents 4,472,835 through 4,473,906
Reissue Patents based on the above identified patents.

No maintenance fees are required for design or plant patents.

Payments of maintenance fees in patents should be directed to "Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, Box M. Fee, Washington, D.C. 20231."

The current amounts of the maintenance fees due at 3 years and six months are set forth in 37 CFR 1.20(e) and (h), as amended effective Oct. 5, 1985, which are reproduced below:

37 CFR §1.20 Post-issuance fees

"(e) For maintaining an original or reissue patent, except a design or plant patent, based on an application filed on or after Dec. 12, 1980 and before Aug. 27, 1982, in force beyond 4 years; the fee is due by three years and six months after the original grant . . . $ 225.00"

"(h) For maintaining an original or reissue patent, except a design or plant patent, based on an application filed on or after Aug. 27, 1982, in force beyond 4 years; the fee is due by three years and six months after the original grant:

By a small entity (§1.9(f)) . . . . . $ 225.00
By other than a small entity . . . . . $ 450.00"

The amounts of the surcharges as amended effective Oct. 5, 1985, are set forth in 37 CFR 1.20 (k) and (l) which are reproduced below:

"(k) Surcharge for paying a maintenance fee during the 6-month grace period following the expiration of three years and six months, seven years and six months, and eleven years and six months after the date of the original grant of a patent based on an application filed on or after Dec. 12, 1980 and before Aug. 27, 1982 . . . . . $ 110.00"

"(l) Surcharge for paying a maintenance fee during the 6-month grace period following the expiration of three years and six months, seven years and six months, and eleven years and six months after the date of the original grant of a patent based on an application filed on or after Aug. 27, 1982:

By a small entity (§1.9(f)) . . . . . $ 55.00
By other than a small entity . . . . . $ 110.00"

Section 1.20 paragraph (m) as amended as a result of enactment of Public Law 98-622 effective Nov. 8, 1984, is reproduced below:

"(m) Surcharge for accepting a maintenance fee after expiration of a patent for non-timely payment of a maintenance fee where the delay in payment is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner to have been unavoidable . . . . . $ 500.00"

Notice of Expiration of Patents Due to Failure to Pay Maintenance Fees

35 U.S.C. 41 and 37 CFR 1.362(g) provide that if the required maintenance fee and any applicable surcharge are not paid in a patent requiring such payment, the patent will expire at the end of the 4th, 8th, or 12th anniversary of the grant of the patent depending on the first maintenance fee which was not paid.

According to the records of the Office, the patents listed below have expired due to failure to pay the required maintenance fee and any applicable surcharge.

IMPROVEMENTS TO SERVICES

- Until June 1987, trademark assignments containing more than 99 properties were pulled from the normal processing pipeline and handled separately. This was being done since the automatic typewriters used to record the information must be reset to accommodate for more than 99 properties. However, this procedure had resulted in delays in recording such assignments, and in their being processed well after other assignments with earlier receipt dates. An intensive effort has been underway to record all those assignments and the backlog has now been completed. All trademark assignments, regardless of the number of properties, are now being processed in date order and we are planning to be back on schedule by the end of Sept.

  Similarly, patent assignments involving several properties had also been delayed. The increase in the days to process assignments reflects the working off of this backlog. It is expected to be completed by the end of Sept. and all patent assignments should be back on target in Oct.

HELPFUL HINTS

- Certificate of Mailing AND Return Post Card — Use of the Certificate of Mailing Procedure is strongly encouraged.

  37 CFR 1.8(a) provides for the use of a Certificate of Mailing on most correspondence with the PTO, whereby the correspondence (and/or fee) will be considered as timely filed if deposited with the U.S. Postal Service within the set time period. Consistent use of this procedure is extremely beneficial to practitioners, whether or not the Post Card Receipt provision of MPEP 503 is used.

  In those instances where the PTO never receives the correspondence, no post card receipt will be available to evidence the filing and/or timeliness of the correspondence. However, in those instances where a Certificate of Mailing is properly used, 37 CFR 1.8(b) provides relief, even if the correspondence is not received in the PTO at all. Under 37 CFR 1.8(b) the party who forwarded the correspondence need only (1) inform the PTO of the previous mailing of the correspondence, (2) supply a copy of the previously mailed correspondence and Certificate, and (3) include a declaration which adequately attests to the previous timely mailing.

37 CFR Part 1

[Docket No. 70635-7135]

Deposit of Biological Materials for Patent Purposes

AGENCY: Patent and Trademark Office, Commerce.

ACTION: Advance notice of proposed rulemaking.

SUMMARY: This advanced notice of proposed rulemaking sets forth proposed rules and guidelines that the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) is considering to govern the deposit of biological materials for patent purposes.

Every patent must contain a written description of the invention adequate to instruct a person skilled in the art to which the invention pertains how to make and use the invention. In certain instances, such as with some biotechnological inventions, the written description of the invention may not in itself be adequate to permit reproduction of the invention. In these cases, the written description must be supplemented by a deposit of the biological material which constitutes the invention or on which the invention depends if the biological material is not otherwise known and readily available to those skilled in the art. The deposited material becomes unconditionally available to the public at the time the patent is granted.

The rules being considered for proposal by the PTO prescribe the conditions under which a deposit must be made, the kinds of materials that may be deposited, the type of depository which is acceptable to the Office, the time for making an original deposit, the procedures and obligations applicable to the making and maintaining of a deposit and its possible replacement, the term of a deposit and other matters relating to the deposit of a biological material. In general, the rules being considered by the PTO would continue and clarify both long-standing practices of the Patent and Trademark Office and judicially developed principles of patent law. The explanations associated with the rules that are ultimately adopted along with the substantive content of the comments and responses will be incorporated into a set of guidelines that will be published in the Manual of Patent Examining Procedure.

In response to a draft policy statement on the deposit of biological materials for patent purposes, which was circulated among interested bar and industry groups and published in the BNA-Patent, Trademark and Copyright Journal on May 22, 1986, the PTO received twenty five (25) written comments directed to that draft statement. This advance notice addresses the comments received. Interested persons are invited to comment on the rules being considered for proposal. A proposed rulemaking could be made as early as January 1988. A hearing could be held as early as March 1988.

DATE: Comments must be received on or before November 30, 1987 to insure consideration.

ADDRESS: Address written comments to: Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, Box 4, Washington, DC 20231.

Mark to the attention of Stanley D. Schlosser (703) 557-3065. All comments received will be publicly available for inspection in the PTO in room 11C28, Crystal Plaza Building 3 (2021 Jefferson Davis Highway, Arlington, Virginia).

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Mr. Stanley D. Schlosser by telephone at (703) 557-3065.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: An applicant for a patent involving biological material must meet the same requirements for disclosing the invention as apply to other kinds of technology. These requirements are set forth in the first paragraph of § 112 of the patent law (Title 35, United States Code). The invention must be described in such full, clear, concise and exact terms as to enable a person skilled in the relevant technology to make and use the invention. The best mode contemplated by the inventor for carrying out the invention must also be disclosed. The statutory requirements for claiming inventions set forth in the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112 also apply to inventions involving biological material. That is, claims must particularly point out and distinctly claim that which applicants for patent regard as their invention.

Where the invention involves a biological material and words alone are not sufficient to describe the invention adequately to meet the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112, the required biological material completing the written description must either already be known and readily available and likely to continue to be available or be deposited into a suitable depository. Samples of the deposited material must be publicly and unconditionally available upon issuance of the patent. The deposit will be considered part of the patent disclosure and taken into account in determining the scope of the invention and related questions of infringement. As indicated above, the requirement for making a deposit only applies in situations where the biological material is essential to a complete disclosure and either is not known and readily available to the public, or cannot be readily produced from publicly available material according to the information contained in the patent.

A new chapter of rules of practice devoted exclusively to biological inventions, entitled "Deposit of Biological Materials for Patent Purposes", would be added, beginning with proposed new rule 1.200. This new chapter would specifically incorporate into patent practice judicially developed principles applicable to the deposit of biological materials and would be consistent with the duties and responsibilities of the United States as a signatory country to the Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Microorganisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure. It must be recognized, however, that a comprehensive body of patent law has not yet been developed by the courts dealing with the treatment of inventions relating to biological material. In situations where the courts have not provided specific guidance, appropriate rules and procedures are extracted or implied as far as possible from available decisions and existing practices.

The rules being considered for proposal are intended to apply to patent rights pursued under section 101 of the patent law (Title 35, United States Code). Patent applications filed under the Plant Patent Act (35 U.S.C. 161-164) would be unaffected by this advanced notice. However, comments are solicited on the question of whether the Office should consider requiring a deposit of plants in appropriate circumstances where it is clear that a deposit is possible and is necessary to complete the description of an invention under 35 U.S.C. 162, first paragraph.

New rule 1.200 would be proposed to define the nature of biological material that falls within the scope of the rules. The definition is not intended to provide an exhaustive list of materials which may be deposited in accordance with these procedures. Rather, the need for a deposit and the types of material which must be deposited will be developed through experience and judicial decisions. Meanwhile, some guidelines can be provided.

First, biological material includes material that is capable of self-replication, either directly or after insertion into a host. Assuming the continued viability of the samples deposited, this should provide a reproducible supply of the biological material for the term of the deposit.

Chemical compounds, no matter how important or defined their biological activity, are not regarded as biological material within the scope of these regulations. Chemical compounds are capable of description at least through the identification of starting materials and explanation of appropriate procedures used in making the compounds. It must not require undue experimentation in order to make or use the chemical compound from the written description in the patent application. Thus, materials such as proteins, enzymes, or other complex organic materials need not be deposited where the written description alone is adequate to enable those skilled in the art to make and use the claimed invention.

Plant material must be deposited when the patent application is filed outside the Plant Patent Act if needed to meet the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112. As with other biological material, the deposit of plant material together with the written specification must enable those skilled in the art to make and use the claimed invention. Thus, if a plant itself is claimed, deposit of plant cells can be accepted only if the deposited cells will develop into the plant for which a patent is sought through the exercise of procedures either known in the art or taught in the application disclosure. Seeds may be deposited, but must be deposited in sufficient quantity to insure an adequate and timely supply once a patent is granted. The PTO solicits comments on the setting of an appropriate minimum number of seeds to ensure availability of the seed through the enforceable life of the patent. The replacement provisions of proposed rule 1.204 would also apply to replenishing the supply of seeds but may require special provisions because of the time required to provide new seeds—e.g. the replacement provision could be coupled with a terminal disclaimer provision for appropriate reasons. If a hybrid variety is claimed, the PTO will take a position that applicant must deposit the parent lines of the hybrid variety unless applicant is able to establish that propagation of the variety can be achieved by micropropagation or other techniques from the hybridized seed or plants grown from such seed. In the latter case, the deposit of the hybrid seed itself would make an adequate deposit.

While the proposed rules under consideration would be applicable to multicellular living organisms other than plants, including animals, it is anticipated that inventions relating to the development of animals having new and otherwise patentable characteristics will rely on the identification and description of a known and readily available animal that will be treated in a reproducible process to obtain the new animal variety. The PTO is presently not aware of any organization that is willing and able to undertake the responsibilities of a suitable depository for live animals.

Rule 1.201 would be proposed to provide an operative definition of when a deposit is required and also define when a biological material would be considered to be known and readily available to the public so that a separate deposit would not be required. The third paragraph of this rule would provide that there is no presumption that a specific biological material is required for the practice of an invention simply because it is mentioned in an application disclosure. The need to make a deposit of a biological material in accordance with these rules is necessitated only where the biological material is essential to meet one or more of the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 and is not known and readily available and cannot be obtained through procedures known in the art or described in the application from known and readily available materials.

If a biological material is known and readily available at the time the patent is granted, and there is no reasonable basis to believe that the biological material will cease to be available during the life of the patent, no requirement for a separate deposit would be made.

While it is not possible to list all circumstances under which a biological material may be considered to be known and readily available to the public, it is clear that the written description in the specification should be sufficient to allow one of ordinary skill in the art to identify and to obtain the known and readily available material. The present commercial availability of the biological material through normal commercial suppliers, particularly suppliers not under the control of those relying on the availability of the biological material, would make the material known and readily available. The mere fact that the biological material is commercially available only through the patent holder or the patent holder's agents or assigns shall not by itself justify a finding of non-availability, absent a reason to believe that access to the biological material would later be improperly restricted. Since the public has a continuing interest in the availability of information and materials necessary to make and use an invention claimed in a patent, regardless of the patent holder's interest, actual distribution of the biological matter in the marketplace may be required if commercial availability is to be relied on to establish that a specific biological material is known and readily available to the public.

Evidence that a biological material is known and readily available may also take the form of a reference in printed publications or a declaration of accessibility by those working in the field to which the invention relates which establishes wide distribution and ready availability of the biological material. The probative value of this type of evidence will depend on whether the evidence establishes that the biological materials are known and accessible without restriction to those who desire to obtain and test the biological material.

Evidence that a biological material is known and readily available may take the form of a statement showing that it is readily identifiable and available in nature in useful form or that it is available in nature coupled with the existence of a reliable screening test or procedure defined in the specification disclosure or known to those skilled in the art that could be used to isolate the required biological material with reasonable predictability from an identified genus of biological material. See Tabuchi v. Nubel, 194 USPQ 521 (CCPA 1977). A deposit made of a biological material that was known and accessible without restriction to those who desired to obtain and test the biological material would also satisfy the definition of being known and readily available to the public. However, since a mere reference to a biological material deposit in a patent would not necessarily mean that it was accessible without restriction to the public the burden would be on the applicant to establish its ready availability without restriction as through a statement from the depository.

New rule 1.202 would be proposed to define an acceptable depository for the deposit of biological materials for patent purposes for applications before the United States Patent and Trademark Office. This rule states that a deposit may be made either in an International Depositary Authority (IDA) as established under the Budapest Treaty or a depository recognized to be suitable by the Patent and Trademark Office. The depository may be domestic or foreign to the United States, public or private. While it would be administratively convenient for the Patent and Trademark Office to limit acceptable depositories to an IDA, such a restricted policy would not provide a patent applicant with the type of flexibility and availability necessary in the event no available IDA would accept a deposit of a particular biological material. Nevertheless, a depository other than an IDA would be called upon to essentially establish compliance with the administrative and technical requirements set forth in the Budapest Treaty for IDAs in order to establish suitability of the depository to the Office. While there is a desire to provide flexibility to a patent applicant in selecting an appropriate depository, these guidelines are not intended to permit each patent applicant to become its own depository since both the patent owner and the public have an interest in the continued availability and accessibility of the deposit during the enforceable life of a patent and the public has a continuing interest in its availability when the patent is no longer enforceable.

Paragraph (c) of new rule 1.202 indicates that the Office will recognize the transfer of a sample to a suitable depository from a depository which either defaults or discontinues the performance of any of the tasks it should perform. Where such a transfer takes place after a patent issues, a suitable Certificate of Correction would be acceptable to identify the new depository and/or accession number. An appropriate amendment to a pending application to identify the new depository and/or accession number would not constitute new matter. Cf. In re Lundak, 227 USPQ 90 (Fed. Cir. 1985).

Paragraph (d) of new rule 1.202 sets forth the procedure for notifying the Commissioner of the intent to be recognized as a suitable depository by the Patent and Trademark Office. The depositories recognized as suitable by the Office will be published in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office as will the identity of a depository which has defaulted or discontinued its performance under these rules.

New rule 1.203 would be proposed to set forth the time for making an original deposit. An original deposit may be made at any time before the application is filed or during pendency pursuant to a requirement that will be made no later than the date the Notice of Allowance and Issue Fee Due is mailed. The decision in Lundak indicated that a specification disclosure need not be enabling until such time as a patent is granted. Unless the examiner and applicant agree on whether a deposit is required, what must be deposited and the appropriate conditions, the deposit issues will be resolved pursuant to a rejection under 35 U.S.C. 112. The time specified in this particular rule for making a suitable deposit is the last practical moment that the Office can insure that a deposit has been made in accordance with these regulations before a patent is granted. After the issue fee is paid in an application the application undergoes preparation for printing for a period of 8 to 10 weeks so that all the information necessary for printing should be in the application file and should have been approved by the examiner as conforming to these regulations at the time the issue fee is paid. Where a deposit is made after the Notice of Allowance and Issue Fee Due is mailed, applicant would be required to file an amendment under 37 CFR 1.312 to add a description of the accession number and depository together with any required statement.

Unless the regular deposit is made before the effective filing date of an application for patent in the United States, a verified statement will be required from a person in a position to corroborate that the biological material described in the application as filed is the same biological material which is deposited in a suitable depository. The nature of this corroboration will depend on the circumstances in the particular application under consideration including the length of time between the application filing date and the date of deposit.

New rule 1.204 would be proposed to define the circumstances and procedures for replacing a deposit which is necessary for patent purposes. Failure to replace a deposit within three (3) months after learning or receiving notice from a depository that a replacement is needed may cause the application or patent involved to be treated by the PTO as if no deposit were made. The Patent and Trademark Office will apply a rebuttable presumption of an identity between the original and the replaced sample in the event a deposit is replaced where the application or patent making reference to the deposit is relied upon during any Patent and Trademark Office proceeding.

New rule 1.205 would be proposed to define the term of a deposit to be a minimum of 5 years after the most recent request for the furnishing of a sample of the deposited biological material and at least 30 years after the date of deposit. Any deposit which is made pursuant to the Budapest Treaty will be for a term acceptable to the Office. However, where a deposit is not made under the Budapest Treaty, samples must be stored under an agreement that would make them available for at least the term specified in the Budapest Treaty so long as it extended beyond the enforceable life of the patent for which a deposit was made. The enforceable life of a patent includes the original term of seventeen years, shortened by any terminal disclaimer or lengthened by any patent term extension, plus six (6) years to cover the statute of limitations and any additional time beyond this period where the enforceability of the patent remains in litigation.

The period for storing a deposit as literally stated in the Budapest Treaty is likely to cover almost all of the circumstances before the Patent and Trademark Office. However, in the event that the period of storage would expire before the earliest possible expiration date of the enforceable life of the patent, one of the basic intents of Congress to insure that the public can practice the invention claimed in an expired patent may be frustrated, and it is not believed that the period set forth in the Budapest Treaty intended for such a situation to arise. The availability of the deposited biological material which is essential for making and/or using the subject matter claimed in the patent is a legitimate ground for concern on the part of the Patent and Trademark Office. Ex parte Lundak (decided August 21, 1984, reversed on other grounds In re Lundak, 227 USPQ 90 (Fed. Cir. 1985)). The Board of Patent Appeals considered the possibility that an initially enabling disclosure might become non-enabling over a period of time. In re Metcalfe, 410 F2d. 1378, 161 USPQ 789 (CCPA 1969). Suggesting that a rule of reason approach similar to that applied by the Court in Metcalfe should continue to inhere in the deposit procedure of the Patent and Trademark Office, the Board suggested that it was appropriate to insist that the depository be contractually obligated to maintain the deposit for at least a reasonable time after expiration of the patent rights. In determining whether the period is sufficient to extend beyond the enforceable life of the patent, neither the possibility of patent term extension nor the possibility of protracted litigation will be considered. Where the minimum period of storage would not extend beyond the enforceable life of the patent, as where there is prolonged pendency of an application or continuation or divisional applications are involved, one approach would be to require applicant to undertake to request a sample every five years beyond the 30 years measured from the date of deposit so that the deposit would be stored for a period beyond the enforceable life of the patent.

A non-viable deposit cannot be relied upon to supplement a written description in a patent application. Experience has shown that as many as 10% of the deposits made with American Type Culture Collection (ATCC) on which a viability test was conducted were not viable when received at the depository. The requirement for verification of the viability of deposits is consistent with the Budapest Treaty and is a subject of proposed new rule 1.206.

The viability of a deposit made under the Budapest Treaty is a requirement. Thus, a mere statement by applicant, an authorized representative of applicant or assignee that the deposit has been accepted under the Budapest Treaty would satisfy this rule. Otherwise, viability may be tested by the depository or any other entity provided that the material tested is received from the depository. The viability test must conclude that the deposited biological material is capable of reproduction directly or indirectly and no evidence will be required to satisfy the deposit requirement relative to the ability of the deposited material to perform any function described in the application. However, as with any other issue of description or enablement, if the examiner has evidence or reason to question the objective statements made in the application, applicants may be required to demonstrate that the deposited biological material will perform in the manner described.

A viability statement for each deposit which is not made under the Budapest Treaty must be filed in the patent application and contain the information identified in paragraph (b) of proposed new rule 1.206. The examiner shall not question the conclusion in a viability statement issued by a depository recognized under either proposed new rule 1.202 (a) or (b). If the viability test indicates that the deposit is not viable upon receipt, or the examiner cannot for scientific or other valid reasons accept a statement of viability received from the applicant, the examiner shall so notify the applicant stating the reasons for not accepting the statement and proceed with the examination process as if no deposit had been made.

New rule 1.207 would be proposed to address the conditions under which a deposit must be made in order to satisfy access to the deposit. First, access during the pendency of an application to a deposit must be available to one determined by the Commissioner to be entitled thereto under 37 CFR 1.14 and 35 U.S.C. 122. A deposit pursuant to the Budapest Treaty meets this requirement. Secondly, the deposit must be made under conditions that all restrictions on the availability to the public of the deposited biological material will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent. Conditions on the release of a deposited biological material such as identifying the ultimate recipient of the material, or a provision on the further transfer of the material, or any other stipulation that acts as a precondition to the release of the biological material referenced in an issued patent will be considered to be a prohibited restriction on the availability to the public of the biological material so deposited. The depository may be asked to provide to the depositor such information as the identity of sample recipients but not as a precondition to release after the patent is granted.

Since the mere description of a deposit or identity of a deposit in a patent specification is not necessarily an indication that a requirement for deposit or compliance with these rules has been made, the Office will certify whether a deposit was stated as having been made under conditions which make it available to the public provided the request contains the information set forth in Paragraph (c) of proposed new rule 1.207.

New rule 1.208 would be proposed to set forth the procedures which would be followed by an examiner once the examiner determines that a specific biological material is both essential to make and use the claimed invention and is not known and readily available within the meaning of rule 1.201(b). It is only when the examiner has made these determinations based on the record in the application being considered that the need for a deposit of the identified biological material must be considered. A deposit accepted by an IDA under the Budapest Treaty shall be accepted for patent purposes by the PTO if additional statements are made that all restrictions on the availability to the public of the deposited material will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent, and the deposit will be replaced if viable samples cannot be dispensed by the depository.

A deposit under the Budapest Treaty would mean that a viable deposit has been made (Budapest Rule 10) in an acceptable depository (IDA) for a period of five years after the most recent request and at least 30 years from the date of deposit (Budapest Rule 9) under conditions that access to the deposit will be available during pendency of the patent application to one determined by the Commissioner to be entitled thereto under 37 CFR 1.14 and 35 U.S.C. 122 (Budapest Rule 11.1). Assurance of reasonably permanent availability of the deposited material through the depository is reasonably assured through the deposit of a viable culture under the Budapest Treaty and the requirement to make a new deposit in § 1.204(a). It is sufficient if a written statement is made by applicant, an attorney or agent prosecuting the application or a person representing the assignee that a deposit has been accepted by an IDA under the Budapest Treaty under conditions that all restrictions on the availability to the public of the deposit will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent. A suitable statement would be as follows:

(1) I am (relationship to application)
(2) Viable samples of—
Material:
Accession Number:
Deposit Date:
were deposited and will be maintained with
(3) (Name and Address of Depository)
(4) Under terms which are in accordance with the provisions of the Budapest Treaty.
(5) Upon issuance of a patent on this application, all restrictions on the availability of the deposited material to the public will be irrevocably removed.

If the examiner determines that a deposit is required and has not been made in compliance with these rules, the examiner shall reject all the affected claims in the application under the appropriate provision of 35 U.S.C. 112, explaining why a deposit is needed or why a deposit which was made cannot be accepted for patent purposes. Although the Court in Lundak indicated that the enablement requirement of 35 U.S.C. 112 need not be satisfied until the patent issues, the only way the Office can efficiently and effectively address the deposit issue is during the examination of the application. After the examiner has determined that a deposit is required, and until a deposit in accordance with these rules is made, or until the Office is assured in writing that a deposit in accordance with these rules will be made up to and including the date the issue fee is paid, or the examiner is convinced that a deposit is not required under the circumstances of the application being considered, the rejection will be made and maintained by the examiner. Written assurance may take the form that an identified specimen will be deposited and maintained in an IDA under the Budapest Treaty before the issue fee is paid under conditions that all restrictions on the availability to the public of the deposited material will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent, or any other specific assurance that the examiner can recognize and accept that there are no outstanding issues to be resolved on the deposit question.

In the circumstances where the Office has received written assurance that an acceptable deposit will be made before or on the date of payment of the issue fee, and there are no other outstanding matters to be considered relative to the patentability of the claims, the Office will mail to the applicant a Notice of Allowance and Issue Fee Due together with a requirement that the required deposit be made within three (3) months. The period for satisfying the requirement for deposit will be extendable under 37 CFR 1.136(a), as is the case with a requirement for drawing corrections made at the time the Notice of Allowance and Issue Fee Due is mailed. In appropriate circumstances, relief also may be available under 37 CFR 1.136(b) if sufficient cause is shown for an extension of time in order to make the appropriate deposit. Sufficient cause would be decided by the appropriate Group Director. Failure to make the required deposit in accordance with the requirement will result in abandonment of the application for failure to prosecute. Since the opportunity exists to request extensions of time under 37 CFR 1.136 to make a viable deposit, no application should go abandoned for failure to make a viable deposit. However, the Office reserves the right to require the filing of a terminal disclaimer where the time required to make a viable deposit unreasonably delays the issuance of a patent.

The contents of the specification regarding any deposit made are specified in new rule 1.208(d). In addition to such identifying criteria as accession number for the deposit and the name and address of the depository, the specification should include the date of deposit (i.e. the date from which the term of deposit specified in new rule 1.205 is to be measured) and a taxonomic description of the deposit. This written description is that required by 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph and should be sufficient to characterize and distinguish the biological material deposited. This written description will serve to inform the public of the essential characteristics of the deposited material once the patent is granted, and will facilitate the examination process which necessarily involves comparisons with prior art biological material.

Other Considerations

The rule change being considered for proposal is in conformity with the requirements of the Regulatory Flexibility Act (Pub. L. 96–354), Executive Order 12291 and the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980, 44 U.S.C. 3501 et seq.

The rule changes being considered for proposal are not expected to have a significant adverse economic impact on a substantial number of small entities (Regulatory Flexibility Act, Pub. L. 96–354). The proposed deposit practice will not impose extra work on patent applicants (whether small or large businesses or individuals).

The Patent and Trademark Office has determined that this rule change being considered for proposal is not a major rule under Executive Order 12291. The annual effect on the economy will be less than $100 million. There will be no major increases in costs or prices for consumers, individual industries, Federal,State or local government agencies, or geographic regions. There will be no adverse effects on competition, employment, investment, productivity, innovation, or on the ability of United States based enterprises to compete with foreign-based enterprises in domestic or export markets.

Any information collection requirements that may be contained in the proposed rulemaking resulting from proceedings under this advance notice will be submitted for OMB approval at the time the proposed rulemaking is announced.

List of Subjects in 37 CFR Part 1

Administrative practice and procedure, Courts, Inventions and patents.

For the reasons set out, 37 CFR Part 1 is being considered for proposed amendment as follows:

PART 1—RULES OF PRACTICE IN PATENT CASES

1. The authority citation for 37 CFR Part 1 would continue to read as follows:

Authority: 35 U.S.C. 6 unless otherwise noted.

2. Centered heading and new §§ 1.200 to 1.208 are added as set forth below:

Deposit of Biological Material

§ 1.200 Biological material.

For the purposes of these regulations pertaining to the deposit of biological material for patent purposes, the term biological material shall include material that is capable of self-replication either directly or after insertion into a host. Representative examples include bacteria, fungi including yeast, algae, protozoa, cell lines, plant tissue cells and seeds. Viruses, vectors, cell organelles and other non-living material existing in and reproducible from a living cell may be deposited by deposit of the host cell capable of reproducing the non-living material. Materials analogous to conventional chemical compounds such as proteins and enzymes are not subject to these regulations.

§ 1.201 Need to make a deposit.

(a) Where a claimed invention is, or relies on, a biological material, the requirements of the first and second paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 112 apply. Applicant is required to comply with these requirements in the written description of the invention, which may include reference to known and readily available biological material. If the written description does not meet the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112, the specification may be supplemented by a deposit of samples of the biological material necessary to meet those requirements in a depository and under conditions complying with these regulations.

(b) Biological material need not be deposited if it is known and readily available to the public or can be made or isolated in a reproducible manner from known and readily available material. Biological material will be considered to be known and readily available to the public if samples of the biological material are known and accessible without restriction to those who desire to obtain and test the biological material. Samples will be considered to be accessible even though some requirement of law or regulation of the United States or of the country in which the depository institution is located permits access to the material only under conditions imposed for safety, public health or similar reasons.

(c) The reference to a specific organism or other biological material in a specification disclosure does not create any presumption that the specific material is necessary to satisfy one or more requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 or that a deposit in accordance with these regulations is required.

§ 1.202 Acceptable depository.

(a) A deposit may be made in any International Depositary Authority (IDA) as established under the Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Microorganisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure.

(b) A deposit may be made in any depository recognized to be suitable by the Office. Suitability will be determined by the Commissioner on the basis of the administrative and technical competence, and agreement of the depository to comply with the terms and conditions applicable to deposits for patent purposes. The Commissioner may seek the advice of impartial consultants from the biotechnology industry on the suitability of a depository. The depository must:

(1) Have a continuous existence;

(2) Exist independent of the control of the depositor;

(3) Possess the staff and facilities sufficient to enable it to examine the viability of a deposit and store it in a manner which ensures that it is kept viable and uncontaminated;

(4) Provide for sufficient safety measures to minimize the risk of losing biological material deposited with it;

(5) Be impartial and objective; and

(6) Furnish samples of the deposited material in an expeditious and proper manner.

(c) If any depository under (a) or (b) defaults or discontinues the performance of any of the tasks it should perform, the Office will recognize as a substitute in any pending application or patent a viable deposit made with an IDA or depository recognized to be suitable by the Office which is transferred to said depository from the defaulting depository in the manner required for replacing a deposit under § 1.204.

(d) A depository seeking status under paragraph (b) of this section must direct a communication to the Commissioner which shall:

(1) Indicate the name and address of the depository to which the communication relates;

(2) Contain detailed information as to the capacity of the depository to comply with the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section, including information on its legal status, scientific standing, staff and facilities;

(3) Indicate that the depository intends to be available, for the purposes of deposit, to any depositor under these same conditions;

(4) Where the depository intends to accept for deposit only certain kinds of biological material, specify such kinds;

(5) Indicate the amount of any fees that the said depository will, upon acquiring the status of suitable depository under paragraph (b) of this section, charge for storage, viability statements and furnishing of samples of the deposit.

(e) Once a depository is recognized to be suitable by the Commissioner or has defaulted or discontinued its performance under this section, notice thereof will be published in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office.

§ 1.203 Time of making an original deposit.

(a) An original deposit may be made at any time before filing an application for patent or during pendency of the application for patent pursuant to a requirement that will be made by the examiner no later than the date the Notice of Allowance and Issue Fee Due is mailed.

(b) When the original deposit is made in a depository defined in §§ 1.202 (a) or (b) after the effective filing date of an application for patent, a verified statement will be required from a person in a position to corroborate the fact that the biological material described in the application as filed is the same biological material which is deposited in the depository defined in §§ 1.202 (a) or (b).

§ 1.204 Replacement of deposit.

(a) Where a depository possessing the original deposit cannot furnish samples of the deposit for any reason, the depository shall, promptly after having noted its inability to furnish samples, notify the depositor of such inability, indicating the cause thereof, and the depositor shall be required to make a new deposit of the biological material which was originally deposited within three months of receiving notification that the depository cannot furnish samples. The replacement shall be made in the same depository as the original deposit except:

(1) Where the original depository has lost its status under §§ 1.202 (a) or (b) or no longer carries out its obligations applicable to the involved deposit; or

(2) Where the depository for health or other legitimate reasons is unable to provide samples to requesters outside of the jurisdiction where the depository is located.

(b) An applicant or patent owner shall notify the Office in writing as soon as reasonably possible after a replacement deposit is made in each application or patent affected. This notification shall state the name and address of the depository, the accession number for the deposit, the date of making the deposit, the results of a viability test (as provided for in § 1.206), the reason for making the replacement deposit, and a statement that the replacement deposit is to the best of the depositor's knowledge identical to the original deposit. The notification shall be placed in each application or patent file.

(c) A depositor's failure to replace a deposit within three months after learning or after receiving written notice from a depository that a replacement is needed may cause the application or patent involved to be treated in any Office proceeding as if no deposit were made.

(d) In the event a deposit is replaced, the PTO will apply a rebuttable presumption of an identity between the original and the replaced sample where the application or patent making reference to the deposit is relied upon during any Office proceeding.

§ 1.205 Term of deposit.

A deposit shall be made for a term of at least thirty (30) years after the date of a viable deposit and at least five (5) years after the most recent request for the furnishing of a sample of the deposited biological material was received by the depository. In any case, samples must be stored under agreements that would make them available beyond the enforceable life of the patent for which the deposit was made.

§ 1.206 Viability of deposit.

(a) A deposit of biological material must be viable at the time of deposit and during the term of deposit. Viability may be tested by the depository or by another provided the material tested is received from the depository. The test must conclude only that the deposited material is capable of reproduction. No evidence is necessarily required relative to the ability of the deposited material to perform any function described in the patent application.

(b) A viability statement for each deposit not made under the Budapest Treaty must be filed in the application and must contain:

(1) Name and address of the depository;

(2) Name and address of the depositor;

(3) The date of deposit;

(4) The identity of the deposit and the accession number given by the depository;

(5) The date of the viability test;

(6) The procedures used to obtain a sample if the test is not done by the depository; and

(7) A statement that the deposit is capable of reproduction.

(c) If a viability test indicates that the deposit is not viable upon receipt, or the examiner cannot, for scientific or other valid reasons, accept the statement of viability received from the applicant, the examiner shall proceed as if no deposit has been made. The examiner will accept the conclusion set forth in a viability statement issued by a depository recognized under §§ 1.202 (a) or (b).

§ 1.207 Furnishing of samples.

The deposit must be made under conditions that assure that:

(a) Access to the deposit will be available during pendency of the patent application making reference to the deposit to one determined by the Commissioner to be entitled thereto under § 1.14 and 35 U.S.C. 122, and

(b) All restrictions imposed by the depositor on the availability to the public of the deposited material will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent.

(c) Upon request, the Office will certify whether a deposit has been stated to have been made under conditions which make it available to the public as of the issue date of the patent grant provided the request contains:

(1) The name and address of the depository;

(2) The accession number given to the deposit;

(3) The patent number and issue date of the patent referring to the deposit; and

(4) The name and address of the requesting party.

§ 1.208 Examination procedures.

(a) The examiner shall determine in each application for an invention if a deposit is needed, in case one has not been made, or if a deposit actually made is acceptable for patent purposes. A deposit accepted in any depository under the Budapest Treaty shall be accepted for patent purposes if made under conditions complying with § 1.207(b). If a deposit is required and has not been made in accordance with these regulations, the examiner shall in an Office action reject the affected claims in the application under the appropriate provision of 35 U.S.C. 112, explaining why a deposit is needed and/or why a deposit actually made cannot be accepted.

(b) The applicant shall respond to a rejection under paragraph (a) of this section by—

(1) making an acceptable deposit or assuring the Office in writing that an acceptable deposit will be made on or before the date of payment of the issue fee or;

(2) Establishing that the involved biological material is known and readily available to the public or;

(3) Arguing why a deposit is not required under the circumstances of the application considered.

Other replies to the examiner's action shall be considered non-responsive. The rejection will be repeated until either paragraph (b)(1) or (b)(2) of this section is satisfied or the examiner is convinced that a deposit is not required.

(c) If an application is otherwise in condition for allowance except for the required deposit and the Office has received a written assurance that an acceptable deposit will be made on or before payment of the issue fee, the Office will mail to the applicant a Notice of Allowance and Issue Fee Due together with a requirement that the required deposit be made within three months. The period for satisfying this requirement is extendable under 37 CFR 1.136. Failure to make the required deposit in accordance with this requirement will result in abandonment of the application for failure to prosecute.

(d) For each deposit made pursuant to these regulations, the specification shall contain:

(1) Accession number for the deposit;

(2) Date of the deposit;

(3) Taxonomic description of the deposit; and

(4) Name and address of the depository.

Comments and Responses:

(Editorial Note.—These comments and responses will not appear in the Code of Federal Regulations)

The following responses are directed to the comments received in response to the draft policy statement on the deposit of biological materials for patent purposes. The comments are arranged to generally correspond to the order of topics addressed in the draft guidelines.

Comment: The guidelines should make explicit that it is the Examiner's, not the applicant's, burden to show that a written description is not adequate to describe the invention as claimed. This has been a real problem in that simply because a microorganism or other biological material is involved in a particular claimed invention, it is automatically assumed that a deposit should be required. This is, of course, quite out of touch with reality especially when it comes to inventions relating to recombinant technology.

Response: This suggestion has been in effect, since the PTO clearly has the initial burden of giving reasons, supported by the record as a whole, as to why the written description is not sufficient to enable one skilled in the art to make and use the claimed invention in the absence of a particular microorganism or other biological material. All assertions that the written description is not enabling without a deposit must be supported by the examiner with (1) evidence or (2) reasons to support the conclusion of noncompliance. New rule 1.201(c) being considered for proposal also provides explicitly that there is no presumption that a specific material is required simply because it is described in the specification.

Comment: If enablement and description requirements can be met with a written description, is a deposit required solely for compliance with the best mode requirement?

Response: The best mode requirement of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112 is a separate and distinct requirement from the enabling requirement. In re Newton, 414 F2d 1400, 163 USPQ 34 (CCPA 1969). The best mode requirement is a safeguard against the possible selfish desire on the part of some people to obtain patent protection without making a full disclosure. The requirement does not permit an inventor to disclose only what is known to be the second-best embodiment, retaining the best as a trade secret. The fundamental issue that should be addressed is whether there was evidence to show that the quality of an applicant's best mode disclosure is so poor as to effectively result in concealment. In re Sherwood, 615 F2d 809, 204 USPQ 537 (CCPA 1980). If a deposit is the only way to comply with the best mode requirement then the deposit must be made.

Comment: We regret that the PTO has not attempted to provide some guidance as to the circumstances under which a biotechnology invention will be deemed to be reproducible from the written description alone. One such circumstance would appear to be where sequence data for the transcriptional unit of rDNA vector is available either directly from the specification, or from the published literature.

Response: While such guidance may be of some assistance, it may be of momentary value because of the changing nature and development of technology. In addition, useful guidelines would be difficult in view of the tremendous variety of factual circumstances that play a role in determining whether the claimed invention can be practiced without undue experimentation. Some guidance is available in Ex Parte Forman, 230 USPQ 546 (BPAI 1986) where the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences summarized eight (8) factors to be considered in a determination of "undue experimentation."

Comment: Please consider replacing the word "define" in the phrase "define the metes and bounds of the claimed invention" with the word—support—because applicant should be allowed to select representative biological samples to place on deposit which support rather than define the "metes and bounds" of the claimed invention.

Moreover, the deposited biological sample which applicant demonstrates, by the description in the application, to be operable should be deemed sufficient by the PTO to satisfy the deposit requirement and provide adequate basis for applicant to claim variants of the deposited material. Another comment expressed concern that limiting claims to the deposited material (Ex Parte Jackson) may become the norm in patent examination practice if such language is included.

Response: Claims are required to set out and circumscribe a particular area with a reasonable degree of precision and particularity. 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph. This requirement is separate and distinct from the requirement of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112 that the specification disclosure enable one skilled in the art to make and use the invention to a degree commensurate in scope with the claims. Under appropriate circumstances, it may be necessary to specially recite and limit the claims to the deposited biological material in order to adequately define the metes and bounds of the claimed invention. Ex parte Jackson, 217 USPQ 804 (Bd. App. 1982). However, the mere facts that a claimed invention requires the use of a living organism or that samples of a living organism that may be used in the claimed invention have been deposited are never alone sufficient to require applicant to comply with the deposit guidelines or limit any claim to the deposited material.

Comment: There is some interest that the Patent and Trademark Office be requested to print deposit information on the front page of the issued patent—analogous to the cited references rather than buried in the general text.

Response: At the last meeting of the WIPO Permanent Committee on Patent Information, a revised standard was approved recommending use of INID (*I*nternationally agreed *N*umbers for The *I*dentification of *D*ata) codes to identify bibliographic data on the front page of patent documents. A new INID Code (83) has been approved to identify information concerning the deposit of microorganisms, e.g., under the Budapest Treaty.

The PTO is not considering the publication of deposit information on the front page of an issued patent because of the substantial administrative burden that would be involved for a relatively small number of patents. No compelling need or rationale is apparent that would justify the cost for the rare case where such a format may be more convenient.

Comment: The practice of presenting a microorganism for deposit in connection with a patent application was initially adopted as a means for complying with the requirements of section 112. The PTO's current proposal would make a deposit mandatory under administrative rulemaking, for compliance with the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 in an invention which "depends on the use of biological material".

Response: The PTO proposal does not make a deposit mandatory for an invention which depends on the use of biological material. The PTO policy and deposit requirements are intended to provide guidance in those situations when it is determined that a deposit is necessary to satisfy one or more requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112. The proposed rules concern the requirements and procedures for making a suitable deposit if it is determined that a deposit is required before a patent can be granted. The guidelines associated with the proposed rules recognize that the specification may properly rely on information which is publicly available.

Comment: Some recognized culture collections do not make their strains readily available. What can a requester do if it is found that the biological material is not readily available. Most of us do not have access to legal recourse.

Response: The PTO will assume that any deposit made according to these regulations will be readily available upon the granting of the patent. This is a rebuttable presumption that could be overcome only by evidence of the nature which would show that the patent relied upon is inoperative. Since every patent is presumed valid and since that presumption includes the presumption of operability, the burden of proof is high. The PTO does not have the resources to police the depositories such that the depositor must assume the risk that the depository selected will preserve and maintain the deposit made.

Comment: It was suggested that the statement that the availability of the biological material must be such that there is no reasonable basis to question the continued availability of the biological material beyond the enforceable life of a patent was overly stringent. Citing In re Metcalfe, 410 F.2d 1378, 161 USPQ 789 (CCPA 1969).

Response: The suggestion that the proper perspective should be whether there is reasonable basis to believe that the biological material will cease to be available during the life of the patent has been adopted.

Comment: The draft guidelines indicated that a material would be considered to be known and readily available to the public even though some requirement of law or regulation restricted access to material for safety, public health or similar reasons. It has been suggested that the term "national security" be specifically defined in the list of exceptions since this constitutes the basis which precludes making available to the public significant amounts of governmental information. It was further suggested that the phrase "of either of the United States or of the state in which the depositor or the depository institution is located" be added after regulation in the acknowledgment of the fact that biotechnology is an international industry. Finally, it was noted that companies may find it advisable to restrict access even in the absence of any formal legal requirement for product liabilty reasons so that the PTO should regard more leniently restrictions which are fully imposed for public health reasons even if not required by law or regulation, and particularly if they are required by an insurer.

Response: First, the PTO has not seen fit to add national security as a specific item which would permit restriction on access to a biological material which would still be considered to be known and readily available. It is difficult to determine with any degree of certainty what any country may consider to be national security. Further, an invention which involved national security matters would not be published before the restrictions on access to that invention involving national security were removed.

Secondly, while the international scope of the biotechnology industry is clearly recognized, the proposal to include the country or state in which the depositor is located would appear to be unnecessary so long as the requirement of law or regulation would apply to the depository institution where the deposit is located. accordingly, the suggestion has been adopted to this extent.

Finally, it is believed inappropriate for the PTO to accept a biological material to be known and readily available to the public on the basis of what some private insurer may require of the depositor. Unless the restriction is based on some requirement of law or regulation which restricts access to the material for safety, public health or similar reasons, the PTO will not consider that a biological material is known and readily available to the public.

Comment: It was suggested that a biological material should not have to be deposited if it could be readily reproduced from materials known and available to the public based on the description of how to make and use found in the disclosure.

Response: This suggestion has been adopted in the first sentence of new rule 1.201(b) being considered for proposal which includes the statement that the biological material need not be deposited if it can be made or isolated in a reproducible manner from known and readily available material.

Comment: The guidelines had stated that the fact that the biological material had multiple known uses would tend to provide assurance that the required biological material would continue to be available. It was noted that this might be construed to mean that a recitation of multiple uses in applicant's disclosure is evidence that the biological material would be readily available to the public which clearly it is not.

Response: The person making the comment accurately noted that the two have no bearing one to the other. However, if there was evidence that the biological material had been put to use for more than one purpose by a variety of people, it would be considered to constitute at least an indication that the biological material in question was known and accessible to those who desire to obtain at least a sample of the subject biological material. It would have been evidence of distribution in commerce, consistent with the idea that it was known and readily available.

Comment: With respect to biological material that is known and readily available, the initial guidelines indicated that the written description in the specification should contain information on the biological material to the extent available. This, according to the comment, could be construed as requiring an enormous amount of information.

Response: This comment is well taken. Accordingly, new rule 1.201(b) would be proposed to require that the written description of the biological material should be sufficient to allow one of ordinary skill in the art to identify and obtain the publicly available material.

Comment: The initial guidelines stated that material would be considered to be known and readily available if the biological material was known and accessible to those who would desire a sample to practice the invention. The comment indicated that the word "practice" implies a right to utilize the deposited materials and thus the invention. This right does not exist absent a license if the material is protected by a patent. Experimental use is not a right but rather an exception to a finding of infringement and thus subject to different burdens of proof. It was suggested that the word "test" be substituted for practice.

Response: This suggestion would be adopted in new rule 1.201(b) since the concept of whether a biological material is known and readily available to the public is not determined on the basis of whether or not its manufacture, use or sale would infringe an existing patent.

Comment: There is no statutory basis in U.S. law for supporting the position that availability of the biological material must extend beyond the enforceable life of a patent. To require otherwise is to inequitably place a patentee in a position that amounts to guaranteeing a supply of the "manufacturing facilities" to competitors at little or no cost and at a time when the competitors are free to use the deposited material without an accompanying benefit to the ex-patentee.

Response: This provision finds specific basis in the decision of Ex Parte Lundak, and is based on one of the basic principles of the patent system—i.e. that a patent is an exclusionary right granted for a "limited" time and that the public is not excluded from practicing the invention once the patent expires. This does not mean that the patentee must be a perpetual supplier of the biological materials that may be necessary to practice the invention. However, it does mean that the patentee should not be permitted to place a limitation on the accessibility of the necessary biological material once the patent expires. As noted by the Court in In re Metcalfe, 410 F2d. 1378, 161 USPQ 789 (CCPA 1969) it is always possible that the practice of a given patented invention may become impossible because an essential material becomes unavailable due to a lack of raw materials, public disaster, or other occurrence not within the control of the patentee. The proposed regulations contemplate that the patentee would not control the availability of the biological material once the patent has expired.

Comment: The phrase "known and readily available" should be in the disjunctive. There is no case regarding regular chemical inventions that chemicals used by an applicant need to be both known and readily available.

Response: The phrase "known and readily available" was selected to indicate public accessibility to those wishing to test the biological material. A material may be known in the sense that its existence has been published, but is not available to those who wish to test that particular known biological material. In addition, a biological material may be available in the sense that those having possession of it would make it available upon request, but no one has been informed of its existence. Consequently, the concept of known and readily available is considered to accurately define the level of public accessibility to the biological material intended.

Comment: An examination of the PTO policy statement on the deposit of biological materials suggests that the only safe procedure for satisfying the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 would be to require a deposit or to establish that the biological material is readily available in nature or can be obtained by some type of screening procedure. The other criteria set forth pertaining to "known and readily available to the public" did not appear to have sufficient safeguards for access during the term of the patent and after its expiration date.

Response: While there is clearly an element of risk involved in trying to preserve living matter over an extended period of time even with a deposit, the Office believes that where there is a sufficient indication that the biological material has reached a sufficient level of accessibility and availability for distribution which is intended to be captured by the concept of "known and readily available" the public interest has been served as necessary to support a patent grant. The incentives provided by the patent system should not be constrained by the possibility that a disclosure that was once enabling would become non-enabling over a period of time through no fault of the patentee. In re Metcalfe.

Comment: Several people made comments relative to the commercial availability of the biological material being an indicator that the material was known and readily available.

Suggestions were made to substitute "applicant or applicant's assignee" for those relying on the availability of the biological material and to clarify the "patent holder's agent".

Response: The PTO does not want to guess or be constrained by any particular business relationship that may be created to control accessibility of the biological material to the public. The concept was intended to embrace the situation where an applicant or a patentee before the Patent and Trademark Office relying on the public availability of the biological material through a commercial supplier is not likely to restrict access once the patent is granted.

Comment: While some characterize the PTO's concern for commercial suppliers under the control of those relying on the availability of the biological material as almost insulting, others indicated that they could appreciate the PTO's concern when the patent holder controls commercial availability. One person suggested that a patent owner who tried to restrict access after a decision was made not to enforce the patent would run the risk that a disgruntled requester would seek treble damages anti-trust action based on patent misuse, or a requester might file a complaint with the FTC or the anti-trust division of the U.S. Department of Justice. Moreover, it was suggested that a disappointed requester could certainly notify the PTO of the incident which might result in a disciplinary proceeding against the patent counsel, and would certainly discredit subsequent attempts by the same patent owner to rely on an allegation of commercial availability. It was also suggested that it would be appropriate for the PTO to suggest one or more means by which a patent owner could provide acceptable assurance that the biological materials would remain available such as by deposit of a performance bond which would be forfeited if the biological material is not provided to a lawful customer upon tender of payment.

Response: The PTO does not have the resources or expertise to engage in the type of enforcement procedures suggested in these comments. Further, there is clearly no evidence at this point in time to provide for the mere possibility that a commercial supplier may be motivated to eliminate or otherwise restrict access to the biological material once the patent is no longer enforceable or a decision is made not to enforce the patent.

The PTO will accept commercial availability as evidence that a biological material is known and readily available only when the evidence is clear and convincing that the public has unrestricted access to the material. A product could be commercially available but only at a price which effectively eliminates its accessibility to those desiring to obtain a sample. The relationship between an applicant relying on a biological material and the commercial supplier relied upon is simply one factor that would be considered in determining whether the biological material was known and readily available. However, the mere fact that the biological material is commercially available only through the patent holder or the patent holder's agents or assigns shall not by itself justify a finding of non-availability, absent reason to believe that access to the biological material would later be improperly restricted.

Comment: Several comments were received directed to the use of printed publications providing evidence that the biological material is known and available to the public. It was suggested that the probative value of this type of evidence should depend not only on the number of publications but also the character and institutional affiliation of the publications. It was also suggested that foreign applicants would rightfully object to consideration of whether the publications are domestic or foreign. One comment stated that the concept of peer review should be eliminated and that inquiry be made into whether the publication policy of the journal makes references to the availability of cited material, and whether that policy is in fact enforced. Finally, it was indicated that it was impractical to expect an applicant to provide a tally or comprehensive search of technical journals and patent literature to establish availability of biological materials.

Response: The PTO does not believe that it is possible to list all the possible factors that might be considered relevant or how they would be weighed under any particular factual circumstances to determine whether a biological material is known and readily available to the public. However, it is considered appropriate to list exemplary factors that might be considered in determining the probative value of this type of evidence. There was no intent to discriminate between domestic and/or foreign applicants or publications, but the reference to domestic and foreign publications could be an indication of the scope of distribution of the biological material in question. Thus, publications in a single country, whether it be domestic or foreign to the United States, would suggest more limited distribution than references and publications of both domestic and foreign origin. Finally, there is no requirement to demonstrate that a biological material is known and readily available by any particular set of facts, but the PTO has provided some guidance in proposed rule 1.201(b) and associated text as to the variety of circumstances that an applicant may use to establish that a biological material is known and readily available to the public.

Comment: The language pertaining to declarations of accessibility which indicate a preference for those who are not members of the same organization as applicants in the application should be deleted because it suggests a higher level of credibility attaches to the declaration of such an individual.

Response: While it is recognized that the declaration executed by any declarant is subject to the same penalties under § 1001 of Title 18 of United States Code, it can be agreed that the evaluation of declarations should be based solely on their merit and not the organizational relationship between the inventor and the declarant. However, the preference was directed not to the credibility of the declarant, but whether accessibility was known beyond the confines of the organization of which both the applicant and the declarant were members. The knowledge might be compared to an uncataloged manuscript in a library that was distributed among the staff of an organization which included that library but was unknown to people outside that organization. Again, the mere fact that applicant and declarant were members of the same organization should not by itself justify a finding that the biological material in question is not known and readily available. Other factors such as the nature of the organization, distribution of the biological material, and procedures or mechanisms for access would also be considered.

Comment: The meaning of the term "abundantly" as modifying the availability in nature of the biological material was not understood. It was pointed out that a rare microorganism might be readily obtained if a good screening procedure was available. It was also pointed out that it was not understood what is meant by evidence of being available in nature since a description in the patent of a precise geographic location should be sufficient because this is an instance when a deposit is not required.

Response: These suggestions have been essentially adopted. As noted in one of the comments, the decision by the PTO Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences (Reinhardt, US Patent 4,548,814) held that a description of the precise geographic location of Marine Tunicates used in the patent was adequate to satisfy the enablement requirement. However, use of the term "readily" to define availability is considered appropriate to define that degree of availability which would be reasonable under the circumstances. For example, when an applicant tried to rely on patent applications which had been opened for public inspection in Rhodesia, Panama and Luxembourg to fulfill the enabling requirement, the Court held that when no guide at all has been given in the application, an applicant must show that anyone skilled in the art would actually possess the requisite knowledge or would reasonably be expected to check the source which the applicant relies upon to complete his disclosure and would be able to locate the information with no more than reasonable diligence. In re Howarth, 210 USPQ 689 (CCPA 1981).

Comment: It was suggested that there is no good reason why a previous deposit can be relied upon only when it is referred to in a United States patent or statutory invention registration as opposed to a foreign patent. One person went so far as to suggest that any reference to a microorganism deposited in one of the recognized depositories should be sufficient in and of itself.

Response: Since the arrangement made with the depository is one between the depository and the depositor, the simple deposit of a biological material in a recognized depository is not sufficient in and of itself to satisfy the requirement of the biological material to be known and readily available. However, if the deposit has been accepted under the Budapest Treaty and made under conditions that all restrictions on its accessibility will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent, whether the deposit is referenced in a United States or foreign patent document would not make any difference. However, there may be limitations on release of the biological materials that are permitted in other countries but which are not within the scope of the conditions accepted in the United States once the patent has been granted. Consequently, the mere reference in any document, be it a United States patent or a patent in a country foreign to the United States is not in and of itself sufficient to establish that it is known and readily available unless the deposit has been made under conditions which are consistent with those specified in these proposed rules.

Comment: It would be very helpful if you included a statement to the effect that if a deposit meets the requirement of the Budapest Treaty, the Office will accept the deposit.

Response: An explicit provision to this affect would be included in new rule 1.208(a). It would state that a deposit accepted in any depository under the Budapest Treaty shall be accepted for patent purposes if made under the conditions complying with 1.207(b)—that all restrictions on the availability to the public of the deposited material will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent. The additional requirement of 1.207(b) must be stated since the Budapest Treaty leaves to the national laws the specific provisions to obtain access to a sample after the patent has issued. The requirement to maintain a viable deposit of the biological material (1.204a) recognizes the public interest in the availability of the information and materials to make and use the claimed invention.

Comment: The inventor of a biological invention should not be hostilely discriminated against by satisfying a higher burden to prove enablement but should instead be treated on the same basis as are all other applicants. The proposed guidelines should allow for and recognize that in many instances a deposit simply is not required.

Response: There was no intent in the proposed guidelines nor in the proposed rules to alter in any way the standard of enablement required by 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph. The rules being considered by the PTO specifically indicate that a biological material need not be deposited if the written description is sufficient to meet the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 or if the biological material is known and readily available to the public or can be made or isolated in a reproducible manner from known and readily available materials. See new rules 1.202 (a) and (b) being considered for proposal. In addition, it is specifically stated that the mere reference to a specific organism or other biological material in a specification disclosure does not create any presumption that the specific material is necessary to satisfy one or more requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 or that a deposit is required to be made. See new rule 1.201(c) being considered for proposal.

Comment: Requiring that the deposits be made in an IDA is excessively burdensome, particularly to a small inventor and those academic institutions which generate in the course of a typical research program dozens or even hundreds of hybridomas which must then be deposited if the institution is to comply with PTO deposit guidelines. Depositing of biological materials (when required) at any location should be sufficient providing that the averments for appropriate access and supply of viable material can be made. The patentee has the most at stake in insuring that the deposit is maintained and available during the life of the patent. If the deposit is permanently lost, the patent will be lost also. The entire rationale for requiring an independent depositor is to remove the responsibility from the patentee and place it in the hands of an independent third party. If the depository is required to replace a strain if it becomes non-viable, it would appear that double depositing is necessary. The logical thing, according to one comment, is either to have the third party depository entirely responsible for the culture or to permit the depositor to maintain his own cultures.

Response: The concept of an independent depository or an IDA as an acceptable depository is based on the need and desire to ensure the safe and reliable storage of a deposited biological material under circumstances that are free of the opportunity for intentional or negligent handling of the deposited material. The use of an independent depository or an internationally recognized depository will tend to preserve the integrity of the deposit process against those that may accidently alter the deposited material, may wish to tamper with the deposited material or may wish to resume control of its availability when the patent is no longer enforceable, and to preserve the interest of the public in the free access to the biological material for any purpose once the term of the patent expires. Further, while the PTO is constrained to approve independent depositories other than an IDA, the PTO has neither the resources nor capability to assess the individual capability of any party that wishes to act as its own depository. The rules under consideration are intended to minimize depositories that will be found acceptable.

The concept of having an independent depository in addition to the requirement of the depositor to replace a culture which is no longer viable is based on the premise that the patent owner has an interest in maintaining the accessibility of the deposit during the enforceable life of the patent for its own protection, and has an obligation to the public to ensure access to that deposit during the period of enforceability so that a third party could test the biological material, and availability to the public after the patent expires. A patentee should not be able to intentionally convert a patented biological material to a trade secret merely because it was no longer interested or able to enforce the patent.

Comment: A depository does not normally notify the depositor when his strains are supplied to third parties except under the Budapest Treaty. Does this mean we must now change our policy.

Response: No.

Comment: Several comments were received to the effect that due to the nature of deposits, and the ease with which harmful infringing acts can be practiced following access to deposited material, it is reasonable to require that minimum restrictions be made before a request for access to a deposit is satisfied. Such minimum restrictions should include (1) identification of the ultimate recipient and (2) an averment that the ultimate recipient will not use the deposited materials for any uses which would infringe a valid claim and (3) a prohibition against transfer to third parties. The thrust of these arguments is that a patentee has a definite interest in knowing to whom the deposited material is being released and such restrictions would provide the patentee with some measure of protection against those who would unfairly profit from the required deposit. It was concluded that these provisions would not in any substantive way interfere with the purpose of a deposit under 35 U.S.C. 112 or the public disclosure function served by the patent system.

Response: While the unique nature of a deposit in satisfying the enabling or other requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 is recognized, every patent is required to place in the hands of those skilled in the art to which the invention pertains the information required to make and use the invention without undue experimentation. The PTO does not restrict or otherwise monitor the sale of other patent documents containing an enabling disclosure nor place any limits on the further disposition of patents that it sells. Consequently, there is no basis in the law for treating a patent directed to an invention requiring the use of a deposited biological material in any manner different from a patent which does not require a deposit. Patents not requiring a deposit may involve subject matter which is just as difficult to detect infringement as it may be where no deposit is required.

The PTO recognizes the unique nature of an invention which requires the deposit of a sample of a biological material as part of the disclosure, particularly as it relates to the attendant risks that the sample may be used in a way or location that would avoid infringement of the patent. The PTO, however, solicits comments on the advisability of and rationale for seeking a provision in the law that would permit the type of restrictions on access to a deposit after the patent issues that are recommended in the April 8, 1987 WIPO report on the Industrial Property Protection of Biotechnological Inventions. These recommendations, on which we are seeking comment, were as follows:

Samples shall be furnished only if the requesting party has undertaken vis-a-vis the owner of the patent on which the request is based, for the period during which the patent is in force:

(i) Not to make the deposited biological material or any biological material derived therefrom available to any third party;

(ii) To use the deposited biological material or any biological material derived therefrom only for experimental purposes concerning the invention;

(iii) Not to export the deposited biological material or any biological material derived therefrom to any other country or, if the sample was obtained in the country where the depository institution is located and that country is not the country in or for which the patent on which the request was based has been granted, to any other country than the country in or for which the relevant patent has been granted;

(iv) The requesting party shall have the burden of proof concerning compliance with the undertakings referred to in subparagraphs (i–iii); and

(v) For the purposes above, any biological material shall be deemed to be derived from the deposited biological material if it is derived therefrom by culturing or in any other way of replication, provided that the derived matter still exhibits those characteristics of the deposited biological which are essential for the carrying out of the invention.

Comment: The guidelines appear to ignore that the identification of ultimate recipient and limitations on further transfer are required in many cases under the export control laws administered by the Commerce Department. Depositories such as the ATCC regularly apply for licenses before releasing strains. It would appear entirely consistent, therefore, to allow depositors to require that requesters comply with the export control laws since the depository must do so in any event.

Response: The rules being considered by the PTO require only that the depositor make the deposit under such conditions that all restrictions made by the depositor on the availability to the public of the deposited material will be irrevocably removed upon the granting of the patent. This condition does not affect laws or regulations that restrict access for public health or safety reasons.

Comment: The requirement for the patentee to notify the depository promptly after issuance of the patent is unwise and unnecessary. One comment suggested that the use of the word "promptly" is vague and presents the opportunity for problems to arise. The provision was considered unnecessary because the depository releases the deposit when the requester provides the depository with a copy of the issued patent.

Response: This provision has been removed from the rules being considered by the PTO. However, it should be noted (new rule 1.201(c) being considered for proposal) that the mere reference to a specific biological material in the specification disclosure does not create any presumption that the specific material is necessary to satisfy one or more requirements of 35 U.S.C. 112 or that a deposit in accordance with Office policy has been made. A procedure is defined in new rule 1.207(c) being considered for proposal whereby the Office would certify whether a deposit has been made under conditions which make it available to the public as of the issue date of the patent grant.

Comment: Some of the comments received on the requirement for a viability statement provide an adequate response to other comments received. For example, some comments indicated that there should be a presumption that the microorganism is alive and that such testing should not be required. On the other hand, one comment was received to the effect that we should be aware of the problem that material shipped to depositories which, presumably, was viable when shipped, is received and when tested is not viable. This is not uncommon at the ATCC. Another comment indicated that if a viability statement is required it should be done by the depository if the biological material is deposited in a public depository. Another comment indicated that this person was pleased that we have included the third party competent to test for viability option. In some cases tests for viability can require expertise which might not be available at a depository. This option could be very helpful.

Response: Based on the evidence and comments received to date, the PTO is convinced that the requirement for a viability test is appropriate.

Comment: A deposit for either the enforceable life of the patent or for the 30/5 years of the Budapest Treaty should be considered acceptable. While the Budapest Treaty is an executive agreement, and therefor cannot override any clear dictate of 35 U.S.C. 112, it seems presumptuous for an office of an executive department to adopt a policy which is contrary to that embodied in an executive agreement.

Response: The period literally defined in the Budapest Treaty is considered acceptable for a deposit made under that Treaty. However, it is not difficult to imagine a situation where the period defined in the Budapest Treaty would not necessarily extend beyond the enforceable life of the patent. In the Board's decision in Ex Parte Lundak, it was noted that one of the basic principles of the patent system was that the public would not be prohibited from practicing the invention after the enforceable life of the patent. Implicit in that basic principle is the logic that a depositor should not be able to make a deposit under conditions that do not provide for storage beyond the enforceable life of the patent. Nor do we believe that the Budapest Treaty contemplated that the deposit would not be available while the patent is in force. The patentee need not be a guarantor of the availability of the deposited material after the enforceable life of the patent, but neither should the patentee be permitted to provide for storage only up to the date the patent expires.

Comment: The requirement for corroboration goes beyond the holding in Lundak. The requirement is unprecedented in ex parte prosecution. The PTO has regularly accepted Rule 131 declarations without corroboration, and to require it in the deposit situation would be completely inconsistent. The guidelines also fail to address what would be sufficient corroboration.

Response: The degree of corroboration required would depend on circumstances in the individual application. For a situation such as Lundak where a mistake was made relative to the presence of a deposit at the time of filing followed by a deposit within a week to ten days, a verified statement tracing the steps undertaken to deposit the biological material from the point of time of the filing date of the application to the actual deposit would be sufficient. It is the function of the description requirement to ensure that the subject matter that is later claimed in the patent was described in the application as originally filed. Consequently, an applicant who waits to make the deposit until sometime after the filing date of the application has the burden of showing that which is later deposited was the same biological material as existed and was described in the application as originally filed. Corroboration can take any form which is suitable to establish the fact, as opposed to a bare statement made on information and belief, that the deposited material is the same as that which existed as of the filing date of the application. If the material was viable and capable of reproduction as of the time of deposit, the verified statement should indicate that the material was viable and capable of reproduction as of the filing date.

Comment: It would seem that the two month formalities notice under Ex Parte Quayle would be appropriately used in instances where an application is allowable but assurance of public accessibility has not yet been made. There is no statutory authority for setting a three month period for response which would not be extendable upon payment of the appropriate fee.

Response: The PTO believes that once the issue of deposits has been either resolved or is in dispute, no additional time should be necessary. The basic concern is an adverse impact on pendency and disclosure to the public for no apparent reason. If an applicant is going to dispute the necessity of a deposit or the conditions under which it is made, then an appropriate appeal can be taken on that issue. If applicant agrees that a deposit is necessary, the three month period to pay the issue fee is considered adequate to get that job done. Nevertheless, provision has been made in new rule 1.208(c) being considered for proposal for an extension of time under 37 CFR 1.136.

Comment: There should be more specific guidelines as to the form of assurances that will be accepted for making an appropriate deposit. An averment by the applicant, assignee or attorney, in papers submitted during pendency of the application should be acceptable to the PTO. Deceit by such applicant, attorney or assignee should be dealt with in the same manner as deceit in conventional chemical cases.

Response: The Office will accept any assurance made in the record with the intent that the PTO rely on applicant to fulfill the deposit requirement as set forth in these proposed rules. The PTO will ensure that applicants have filed a statement that all conditions have been satisfied before the application is allowed to become a patent.

Comment: The PTO policy and guidelines should not make statements or predictions as to burden of proof during enforcement or other actions in a court of law. The indication that the burden of proof to establish an identity between the replaced sample and the original deposit may be on those seeking to enforce the patent outside the PTO goes against a statutory presumption of validity.

Response: The rules being considered by the PTO are limited to the presumption that the PTO will make in any proceeding involving the patent before the PTO.

Comment: It has been suggested that the procedure to be followed when biological material becomes unavailable be separate from the rest of the paragraph dealing with replacement deposits so that these separate situations are not viewed as one. For example, cessation of availability of biological material not previously deposited can result from, for example, the bankruptcy of the sole commercial supplier of the material. Under such circumstance, a deposit of no longer readily available material would be required.

Response: Since the necessity or desirability of replacing a deposit may arise from a number of circumstances, the PTO does not consider it appropriate to define separate rules or procedures for making a replacement under each circumstance. The rules being considered by the PTO are limited to a replacement right only for the original depositor. As one comment observed, the law on property rights in biological materials is somewhat unclear at this time and redeposit by a party other than the original depositor might be considered an act of conversion, depending on the precise circumstances. Moreover, the PTO has indicated an intention of applying a rebuttable presumption that once a biological material has been deposited for the term and under conditions specified in these rules under consideration by the PTO, the biological material deposited would be considered to be known and readily available to the public.

Comment: The guidelines are unclear as to the ability to obtain the benefit of a foreign priority date. Apparently, the PTO is aware that Lundak held that 35 U.S.C. 112 requires that a deposit be made and a reference added to the specification before the U.S. patent issues. Thus, 35 U.S.C. 119 affords the benefit of the priority date even if the priority document fails to mention a deposit and even if a deposit had not been made.

Response: The PTO will follow the same procedures for handling a claim for foreign priority in all applications. The examiner will acknowledge a claim for foreign priority when all formal requirements are met and will not consider the merits of an applicant's claim of priority unless a reference is found with an effective date between the date of foreign filing and the date of filing in the United States or when an interference situation is under consideration. Where the merits of a claim for priority need to be determined, the examiner will follow the guidelines in § 201.15 of the Manual of Patent Examining Procedure in making that determination. It must also be emphasized that applicants may not be granted priority in applications filed in countries foreign to the United States if they fail to make a deposit in a permanent depository acceptable to that foreign country before the filing date of the application in the United States.

Comment: If a deposit is found to be contaminated, what option does a depositor have? Can the deposit be replaced and the original deposit date be retained?

Response: If a deposit can still be considered to be viable, even though contaminated, the rules being considered by the PTO would not permit replacement of the original deposit. While there may be an appropriate mechanism for substitution of a deposit number in an existing application, the original deposit, even though contaminated, would provide the best evidence of whatever it was that was originally deposited and should be preserved.

Comment: If a deposit does not produce the product for which it was deposited (antibiotic, for instance), what option does a depositor have? Can the deposit be replaced and the original date retained?

Response: Any deposit which is made in accordance with the rules being considered by the PTO would have only a viability statement associated with it. There is absolutely no proof that the material originally deposited was capable of producing the product for which it was deposited. While it's clearly in the interest of the public to have a deposit available to it which is capable of making the product for which it was deposited, the destruction or replacement of the best evidence of what was originally deposited should not be lost if made in association with an existing patent. Perhaps the depositories should consider preservation of samples of the original deposit in conjunction with a deposit which is neither contaminated nor incapable of producing the product for which it was deposited.

Reference Collections of U.S. Patents Available for Public Use in Patent Depository Libraries

The following libraries, designated as Patent Depository Libraries, receive current issues of U.S. Patents and maintain collections of earlier issued patents. The scope of these collections varies from library to library, ranging from patents of only recent years to all or most of the patents issued since 1790.

These patent collections are open to public use and each of the Patent Depository Libraries, in addition, offers the publications of the U.S. Patent Classification System (e.g. The Manual of Classification, Index to the U.S. Patent Classification, Classification Definitions, etc.) and provides technical staff assistance in their use to aid the public in gaining effective access to information contained in patents. With one exception, as noted in the table following, the collections are organized in patent number sequence.

Facilities for making paper copies from either microfilm in reader-printers or from the bound volumes in paper-to-paper copies are generally provided for a fee.

Owing to variations in the scope of patent collections among the Patent Depository Libraries and in their hours of service to the public, anyone contemplating use of the patents at a particular library is advised to contact that library, in advance, about its collection and hours, so as to avert possible inconvenience.

MARKS PUBLISHED FOR OPPOSITION

The following marks are published in compliance with section 12(a) of the Trademark Act of 1946. Applications for the registration of marks in more than one class have been filed as provided in section 30 of said act as amended by Public Law 772, 87th Congress, approved Oct. 9, 1962, 76 Stat. 769. Opposition under section 13 may be filed within thirty days of the date of this publication. See rules 2.101 to 2.105.

A separate fee of two hundred dollars for opposing each mark in each class must accompany the opposition.

SECTION 1.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).

SECTION 2.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).

SECTION 1.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).

SECTION 2.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).
